

Policy 4.2: Copyright Policy

Copyright Laws were created to protect an original expression of an idea but not the idea itself. While it is perfectly acceptable to use an idea, it is not legal to reproduce an original expression of the idea. Once the idea is created into something tangible, it falls under U.S. Copyright protection. This includes anything in print or on the web among other media. U.S. Copyright law (Title 17 of the U.S. Code) prohibits the unauthorized reproduction or distribution of copyrighted material, except by the principles of Fair Use.

In addition, individuals may not copy or distribute electronic materials including email, text, images, programs, or data without explicit permission of the copyright holder.

Any responsibility for the consequences of copyright infringement lies solely with the user.

IADL expressly disclaims any liability or responsibility from use of its technology or materials, including use obtained through electronic information systems.
